Revised October, 1974

PREFACE

The publishers, agencies, associations, and organizations listed here are those identified by the Appalachian Adult Education Center as sources of coping skills materials, adult-oriented materials that are free or inexpensive, easy to read or use, and that contain useful information for solving problems. The materials are pamphlets, books, films, filmstrips, records, cassette tapes, and games.

The purpose of the list is to help public libraries, adult education programs, and others locate materials that meet adult information needs. Related documents developed by the AAEC are (1) a list of coping skill categories, and subcategories, and (2) a list of coping skills materials.

The AAEC defines coping skills as the abilities to (1) define a problem as a need for information; (2) locate information about the problem; (3) process the information, i.e., read or listen with understanding, relate it to other information, and review its uses; and (4) apply the information to the problem. The AAEC also contends that those skills are best developed through cooperation among all the institutions in a community that are concerned with the education and welfare of adults, and conducts projects that demonstrate cooperation among public libraries, adult education programs, and other community organizations and agencies.

Sources are listed in fifteen subject areas: aging, children, community, education, family, free time, health, home, jobs, legal rights, money management, moving, religion, transportation, and understanding self and others. Sources are in alphabetical order within categories, and are repeated in each category in which they supply materials.
